

CALL FOR EXPRESSION OF INTEREST:

Marie Skłodowska-Curie postdoctoral fellowships

SUPERVISOR: Assoc. prof. Ing. Jarmila Zimmermannova, Ph.D.

KEY TOPIC: Multidisciplinary approach for the environmental and socio-economic determinants of health

Science and Research Centre, Faculty of Health Sciences, Palacký University Olomouc is seeking talented and ambitious postdoctoral researchers to jointly submit proposals for the European and Global Marie Skłodowska-Curie postdoctoral fellowships MSCA-PF.

Environmental and socio-economic determinants of health are closely interlinked. Socio-economic determinants are functions of the circumstances in which people live, work and grow; largely shaped by the distribution of resources and power.

Environmental improvements for health can make important contributions towards achieving the Sustainable Development Goals. Exposure to environmental risk factors is unequally distributed, and this unequal distribution is often related to socio-economic characteristics such as income, social status, employment and education, but also noneconomic aspects such as gender, age and ethnicity.

The costs and benefits of prevention through healthier environments are important. Avoided treatment costs and other externalities caused by unhealthy environments should be accounted for.

The research will be focused on links between the environmental and socio-economic determinants of health. Current environmental and climate policy instruments will be observed and evaluated. Regional differences and localisation aspects will be incorporated.
